How Robots May Soon Replace Lawyers in Law Firms

Summary: Have you adequately prepared your employees to accept the impact robotics and/or AI will have on their day-to-day responsibilities?

There’s little doubt among any hiring manager who doesn’t live and work under a rock, that robots – also known as AI – is having an enormous influence on workers and the workplace. The question is, have you adequately prepared your employees to accept the impact robotics and/or AI will have on their day-to-day responsibilities?

When the Robots Arrive, How Will They Fit In?

Analyzing how your workplace and workforce may be affected by technology is one of the first considerations you should make as a manager.

Go here to read the full article.

If robots are the future of work, where do humans fit in?

Conversely, your employees may wonder what their work future will be when new technology is brought onboard in your company.

Go here to read the full article.

Rise of the robots: how long do we have until they take our jobs?

There’s real employee fear in the modern workplace that underscores the arrival of robots into the workplace. How will you handle those in fear of losing their jobs?

Go here to read the full article.

When robots do all the work, how will people live?

As a hiring manager, you will on occasion have to go beyond the workplace and give advice to workers about their lives, particularly as robots enter not just the work environment, but their entire lifestyle.

Go here to read the full article.
2029: The year when robots will have the power to outsmart their makers

If you or your employees are less than excited by the introduction of AI into the workplace, this article may offer some viable arguments against robots as viable work producers.

Go here to read the full article.

When Robots Take All the Work, What'll Be Left for us to do?

What are you doing after the robot takeover at your job? If it’s reassuring those who work beneath you that the robots will be an addition, not a subtraction from the work environment, then you may have some work ahead of yourself.

Go here to read the full article.

After Robots take over our jobs, then what?

The sci-fi angle of artificial intelligence at work can’t be denied, especially when it comes to jobs being taken away. As a hiring manager, it is up to you to reassure your employees that their jobs are safe.

Go here to read the full article.

What Governments Can Do when Robots Take our Jobs.

Fortunately, some in government are giving serious consideration to the impact of AI and/or robots to US jobs, even to the point of those same machines taking away good employing positions.

Go here to read the full article.

What Happens when Robots can do All of the Jobs?

A real fear can crop up in your place of business when they find in the not-so-distant future; robots may be able to do anyone’s job.

Go here to read the full article.

What happens when robots take our jobs?

This article represents the most alarming writing yet on this subject matter. Needless to say, it is a fast-approaching reality that you need to get yourself and your staff ready for.

Go here to read the full article.

AI is Doing Legal Work. But it won’t Replace Lawyers, Yet.

This article reveals that while AI has a growing presence in today’s law firms, it still does not have the capacity to replace lawyers.

Go here to read the full article.

Ready for robot lawyers? How students can prepare for the future of law?

It is true that technology, as it has everywhere else, will have an influence over human workers. What then is a law student supposed to do? How can he or she cope? Keep reading to find out how to survive with AI in the workplace.

Go here to read the full article.